

Chaman dilon ka Khilane ko EID Aayi hai

Wishing you smiles and all things nice

The end of Ramadan ushers in the Eid-ul-Fitr celebrations – a festival dedicated to forgiveness, kindness, and compassion. While Eid is a festival of celebration, it is also the time to reflect upon all of the wonderful aspects of our lives.

As we celebrate this occasion amidst extraordinary circumstances, let us pledge to support each other, encourage each other, and stand with each other. Keep safe, stay home and have a blessed Eid with your loved ones!

Roza-e-Rawadari and Syncretic Culture of India

This is the first Ramadan after the death of our beloved poet and representative of Ganga-Jamuni Tahzeeb, Janab Gulzar Dehlvi. Every year he used to observe one fast – usually on the last Friday of the month, to strengthen the common cultural values. He called it "Roza-e-Rawadari." To break his fast, his friends used to organize a lavish Iftar party. Gulzar Sahib said that he had started observing this special fast on the instructions of Maulana Ahmad Saeed, which he later made a part of his moral and cultural values.

Apni aankhon mein khamistan-e-mai-e-naab liye
Apne aariz pe bahaar-e-gul-e-shadab liye
Apne mathe pe darakhshani-e-mahtab liye
Nikhat-o-rang liye noor ka sailab liye
Eid aai hai mohabbat ka naya baab liye

Wit and Wisdom of India's Most Celebrated Poet

One day, after Ramadan was over, King Bahadur Shah Zafar asked Mirza Ghalib,

"Mirza, kitne rozey rakhey?"

"Mirza replied, Pir-o-Murshid, ek nahi rakha."

Mirza's answer was very interesting. He apparently told the king that he did not observe one.

On the other hand, the real aspect was that he did not observe a single fast.

An interesting reason why Mirza did not fast is explained by himself in his following Qita:

Iftaar som ki kuch agar dastgaah ho
Us shakhs ko zaroor hai roze rakha kare
Jis paas roza khol ke khaane ko kuch na ho
Roza agar na khayee toh naachaar kya kare
